

The Seven Phases of Values Development

A powerful process to move your students from 'knowing good' to 'doing good'.

Goethe once said, "Where values are present, laws are unnecessary. Without values, laws are unenforceable." This quote underpins the main premise of this workshop: The critical success factor for positive school cultures is the development of good values.

A great way to determine if your students have good values or not is to ask yourself the question "What would they do if I left the room for 10 minutes?" The fact is, that despite knowing class rules and expectations, many of our students choose to ignore them. This is because there is much more to promoting positive behaviour than putting a set of rules up on the wall. This workshop will show you what that is and give you strategies and resources to help you move your students from 'knowing good' to doing good'.

You will learn about:

- Effective ways to make students acutely aware of your desired behaviours
- Strategies to help students discover why values are important
- Tools, tips and tactics to make your students WANT to display good values
- Structures, resources and templates to teach desired values
- Ideas to help students practice good values in real-life situations
- Tools, resources and ideas to reinforce and consolidate good behaviour
- Tools and strategies to measure and track good habits

A workshop by David Koutsoukis

David Koutsoukis is an award-winning speaker, educator and author who shows leaders and educators how to engage their people and build inspiring cultures. He is the author of more than 20 books and the creator of the Six Kinds of Best Program.

www.sixkindsofbest.com
info@sixkindsofbest.com
+61 8 9457 5413

www.sixkindsofbest.com